Good Taste Today

By Emily Post

The following letter was sent me by a teacher in a public high school: "I note in your book 'Etiquette' that you give Dear Sirs as the salutation for a business letter. We teach the students to use Gentlemen as the only allowed form. I checked with the secretarial department and the teachers there tell me that Dear Sirs has been outmoded. I'm wondering if there is some reason why the etiquette of individuals should differ from that used in business offices. Perhaps the terms Ladies and Gentlemen do not apply to those in trade."

I am really sorry that I cannot agree with the use of the salutation "Gentlemen" in preference to "Sir," or "Dear Sirs." After all, no one could begin a letter "Dear Gentleman" or "Dear Lady," and in my opinion, the plural is just as offending. From a speaker's platform I agree that Ladies and Gentlemen is correct.

Bacon-Macaroni Bundles Are Novel One-Dish Meal

It's fun to use your imagination to make an attractive, delectable dish out of everyday food.

Take macaroni and cheese, for instance. It's a good-tasting combination which has become a favorite family-meal standby. For variety, call on your culinary imagination to dream up some fun-to-serve macaroni and cheese dishes with new appeal.

Suggestion for one meal might be old favorite, macaroni and cheese casserole, but with an "unexpected" flavor added. Chopped beef, torn in shreds or Frank's, cut pennywise and cooked in the casserole, give interest and appeal.

Paper-thin Cervelat chips, quickly broiled on top of the baked casserole add a zesty, inviting flavor.

Bacon-Macaroni Bundles make a novel and inexpensive meal. Cooked macaroni is laid in bundles, then circled with sweet, smoky-flavored bacon strips. For a pleasant surprise, hide a stick of aged cheddar cheese in the center of each bundle.

Slowly bake the bundles. Serve them, swathed in a rich and creamy cheese food sauce, with baked tomato halves, chilled coleslaw and a fruit-upside down cake.

Bacon-Macaroni Bundles

1 pound sliced bacon

1 7-oz. package macaroni (dried, unbroken)

1 teaspoon salt

Cook unbroken macaroni in boiling salted water until tender. Drain. Straighten out in bundles of 12. Cut bundles in 5-inch lengths.

Wrap each with 2 slices of bacon, fasten with tooth-picks. Bake on a rack in a shallow pan in a hot oven (400 degrees F. until

If You Have Sallow Skin, Follow These Rules

By HELEN FOLLETT

The girl with the golden skin is pretty, looks wholly alive, alert and athletic.

But the poor dear who has sallow skin feels that it is a goodly handicap. No cosmetic magic can seem to change it much, though certain rules of make-up will give it a more normal, healthy appearance.

Dark rachele powder with a suggestion of flesh tint in it—attendants at cosmetic bars to attract from a green-yellow skin tone. Rouge and lipstick must be orange and red, and raspberry shades are just about fatal as far as counterfeiting glamour is concerned for girls with sallow skin.

Work from Within

The cure for this beauty grief means that one must work from within. Chemicals are acting unfavorably upon the epidermal coat.

If you are among the afflicted take a glass of unsweetened lemonade before breakfast and drink a pint of buttermilk a day. These acid drinks have a pleasant effect upon the digestive motors. Tomato and orange juice, rich in vitamin C, are helpful.

The color of the frock and the hat may tend to accent the sallow skin. Green should not be worn. Steel gray isn't so good, although dove gray provides a softening influence.

About Browns

Women with complexions of this character seem to have a special yen for browns and beige tones in dress and nobody can guess why.

TI offer no contrast and should be avoided. Black is a safe color, and black is the smart thing this season. White, definitely out, but soft cream shades are flattering.

Like the redhead, this type should avoid pinks and reds, Navy blue is among the happy selections.

Lighter shades call attention to skin that is far removed from the ideal, peach-and-cream variety. Mauve and soft violet are nice for dress-up.

But the thing to do is to stick to a sensible diet. Eat simple dishes that are not too rich in butter and cream, plenty of fruit, vegetables and green salads.

Stuffed Eggs

Stuffed eggs are a popular winter treat. When you serve them, or enter when you serve them, combine the cooked yolks with chopped ripe olives, a bit of cream and salt, pepper and curry powder to taste. Pile into the whites and heat in a hot oven about 5 minutes. Serve on toast with a Parmesan cheese sauce.

Soup Dish

January days are soup days and for the busy homemaker canned soups are the answer. Combine a small can of shrimp with a can of cream of celery soup and 3/4 cup milk. Season lightly with Worcestershire sauce and Tabasco sauce. Serve piping hot with a few balls or slices of avocado on top.

Slimming With Psychology

Eat Proper Foods to Lose Weight

By IDA JEAN KAIN

Eating to lose weight can be exciting as well as slimming. Overweights sometimes fail to see the exciting possibilities because of a deeply ingrained notion that diet in any form is an ordeal and bound to take the fun out of life.

Here is a revealing test. Check which word comes to mind when you hear or think of the word DIET. Hunger . . . weak . . . cross . . . grapefruit and black coffee. Or would one of these words come first to mind . . . fit and trim . . . slim waisted . . . young!

The word that comes immediately to mind gives the clue as to whether you have a bleak outlook about the whole thing or an eager expectation.

Now, to hurdle any preconceived diet blocks, cogitate on this idea. Suppose you had never heard the word diet or reducing . . . and that today you read in the newspaper that science has at long last discovered a sure way to cope with avoirdupois . . . a way to eat to turn back impounded calories . . . back into energy. As the enthusiasm back into start this new way of eating the very next meal . . . not tomorrow.

All right . . . science has discovered exactly that. By applying the newer knowledge of nutrition you can achieve strength with slimness, a more alive feeling, and look years younger. You may question incredulously. All this and streamlines. And you can!

Now, to nutrition science is wonderful! Certain foods, because of their nutrient composition, contain an abundance of the life-giving elements . . . protein and minerals . . . to bolster sagging tissues and make good the wear and tear of daily living, and vitamins and minerals to act as body regulators.

Do You Speak So That Others Understand You?

By JOHN ROBERT POWERS

As guest of a New York airport recently, I was taken on a behind-the-scenes tour and allowed to view the fascinating spectacle of the elements.

Watching the meticulous checking and rechecking of each plane before its take-off, regardless of whether it had just come from a run or had been subjected to hours of conditioning, I thought of what a perfect object lesson that checking would make for every woman who wanted to make the most of herself.

Unless every component of your charm gets a thorough critical examination regularly, what happens? You are sure to be slipping in some department.

Expected of You

Have you, for instance, recently cast an analytical glance over your major means of communication? Are you sure that what you say deepens the lustre of your personality? If not, it's certain to be detracting from it. In matters of charm there is no middle ground.

Think of the person whose conversation is so decided by irrelevancies that you lose the thread of thought. Polite attention should never lift the speaker into the belief that he or she is an interesting talker. Having to a clear trend of thought as you talk is the least that can be expected of you.

Of course, you are familiar with the person whose conversation runs in the same circle every time you meet. The subjects are always the same, over and over, round and round.

It's an easy habit to fall into—and deadly to charm. To be interesting, everyone must constantly reach out for new ideas—talk about some subject untouched conversationally of late, but let us meet. The subjects are always the same, over and over, round and round.

Then, there is the person who talks with utter disregard of the listener. No chatter, that one. How else can you be sure of interesting your listener? And why, unless that is your goal? Except, of course, when it is necessary to give an order.

In giving orders, admiration is only invoked by those who are specific in instructions; who never raise their voices in anger; and who always speak in the other fellow's language.

To request a demitasse in a restaurant where it obviously would be known as a small cup of coffee is actually boorish ostentation.

Avoiding Dodrums

Everyone is aware of the bore who talks in hackneyed phrases and repeats the same words over and over again.

To avoid this onus, people who wish to be pleasant companions keep their dictionaries handy. They are always seeking to broaden their vocabularies and command of the language.

Lazy enunciation damages what many a person has to say. Those who slough off the final "s" in words ending in "sts," such as hosts and costs—those who drop the final "g" in words ending in "ing"—may slough off more than

Razor Blade Takes Spots Off Floor

By ROGER C. WHITMAN

Question: Could you advise me how to remove cement and paint spots from a new bathroom floor?

Answer: If there are not too many spots you can scrape them off with a razor blade. If the floor is badly spotted and the tile is of the unglazed variety, the spots can be taken off by rubbing with a fine grained emery cloth. The floor can then be scrubbed with a scouring powder, about one-quarter cupful in a pail of warm water.

Question: Some time ago you gave information about erecting wallboard on concrete block basement walls, with instructions to create a dead air space between the concrete wall and the wallboard. I followed your instructions and have a very solid wall; but I am told now that the idea of dead air space between the poured concrete wall and the wallboard is not very practical, because condensation will take place. Would like to obtain more information as to the reason for the dead air space.

Answer: Circulation of warm, humid air between the concrete wall and the wallboard would cause condensation. Dead air space would prevent it. With a dead air space behind the wallboard, the temperature of the surface of the wallboard will be more nearly that of the air in the room, and therefore no condensation would take place on the surface.

They realize.

Lazy enunciation sounds too much like faulty pronunciation and ignorance of what others rightfully expect us to know!
